

Kathleen Voight

Kathleen Voight is a Master of Environmental Science student at the Yale School of the Environment. Her masters research focuses on water management in the Rio Grande Basin and its impact on livestock producers. She believes agriculture and working lands are essential to healthy landscapes and resilient rural communities. Kathleen has a background working in agriculture, ecological monitoring, and environmental education.